Teaching strategies for student drivers with hidden disabilities

Presented By:
Kate Lopez,
President of ADED

ADTSEA

Driving is one of the most complex activities that can be developed. An individual experiencing an intellectual and/or developmental disability can have difficulty with a variety of performance skills that may not be visible but could impact their successful participation in driving. This course will help attendees learn to identify key characteristics of those hidden disabilities and how they could relate to driving performance. This course will then help attendees list potential driving and educational interventions and methods for classroom and on-the-road training for novice drivers with hidden disabilities or how to connect with a Certified Driver Rehabilitation Specialist when further intervention is needed.

Law Enforcement Presentations

Utah Highway Patrol has started a new program and now offer a one hour presentation available to all high school driver education classes. This is a standardized presentation by one of your local law enforcement or school resource officers. If you would like to schedule a presentation for your driver education class reach out to MThompson@utah.gov or 801-657-7107

Phones Track Everything but Their Role in Car Wrecks

Cellphones can track what we say and write, where we go, what we buy and what we search on the internet. But they still aren't being used to track one of the biggest public health threats: crashes caused by drivers distracted by the phones.
